Veterinary Nurse and Community Worker prepare dog for surgery

Based in Katherine, we visit Aboriginal Communities throughout the Northern Territory ranging from the islands off the tip of Arnhem land to deep in the heart of Central Australia. Our vets and nurses perform community dog programs to improve the health and well-being of the animals and entire community.

We have also developed a one day workshop, which we deliver throughout the NT, and first ever comprehensive training manual for communities and staff on community dog programs.

Importance of Programs

These are necessary to establish population and disease control and promote optimal health of animals in Aboriginal Communities. Besides the welfare of animals in communities, many animal diseases can have major impacts on human health, particularly for children.

In our experience, communities that have had regular programs have seen a general improvement in animal and human health
